Flitting around in the roseate light, In his soft, fleecy robe of pearly white, Shook dew-drops of love from his silken wings, And the sweet perfume that a cherub brings; And he touched each heart, and moisten d each eye With incense of love, as he flitted by; Then, with a smile on his wee sweet face, Flew to love s bosom for a fond embrace, And nestled close to that heart of love, Ere he plumed his wings for his flight above. Another cherub was there, though unseen, And witnessed the joy of that tender scene; Well he remembered each dear, loving face, And the thrill of love in that fond embrace; Twas the angel guide of that tiny guest, Nestling so closely on...
