But it needs some unusual experience or great change to prove this true. Such an experience or rather, succession of experiences, I had last Summer. Indeed, thinking now of my trip through New Hampshire, Vermont and New York, a distance altogether of three hundred and sixty miles, every footstep, every scene is as vivid as if I were there now - the lonely mountain roads with the black snakes shooting across the path, and the partridges running out for a second s reconnoitre; the miles of pleasant farmland, with nothing wilder than a woodchuck tumbling over a wall; the crowds of villagers; the blazing heat of the midday sun burning my face deeper and deeper; the calm light of the late moon waking me out of my dreams as I slept in the fields - all appear to me now, more actual as seen in the calm distance than they were to me then; for, looking at such things from the depths of a comfortable arm chair, one gets a truer perspective than in the excitement of the moment.
