CHAPTER XXVI UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE LIVELY LOBSTER The day after the hard crab had saved Uncle Wiggily from the firecracker, the old gentleman rabbit went for another walk along the ocean beach. For that is about the only thing I have to do here on my vacation, he said to himself, as he leaned over to get some sand out of his shoes. And it is very nice down by the water, too; only I wish they would make lettuce candy here occasionally instead of salt water taffy. So, he walked along the beach, thinking maybe he could find a place where the fishermen were making turnip caramels, or maybe carrot ice cream. But he didn't seem to find any. But, as he walked along, he saw something wiggling in the water close to the shore, and he stopped to see what it was. It seemed to be a queer, greenish-colored sort of a fish, with long claws, bigger than a crab's, and it had a tail somewhat like the kind fishes have, only it could curl up. My! that is a queer specimen, thought Uncle Wiggily. I wonder if that animal can come on land and talk to me. I'll ask. So he did, and the animal stuck its head up out of water, and wiggling its whiskers, replied most politely, in a high-priced, expensive sort of voice: Of course, I can come on shore. Then pray, do, invited...
