Here we saw the son carrying his old father out of and into the canoe. In the evening there was in camp a supper of turtles, taken I on the way, to which all were asked. Saturday, 28. In the forenoon we had to go through rough water, but in the afternoon it was better. Several sisters went for cranberries, and came to us in camp at night. We did not get a sight of those who went by land with the cattle to-day, but we saw their camp. We found out and saw that in the spring the river rises twenty feet or more, therefore all the bottoms are covered. Some canoes, being weak, stayed back. Sunday, 29. We had to get by some bad places, and help the cattle get over the river again, when some would have drowned, had we not come to their aid with the canoes. Here again, after many years, we found an oilspring on the bank of the creek, but the water being high, we could get none, for the stream swept it away at once. We encamped at night above a French trader s house, which, however, was vacant. Monday, 30. As it rained in the morning, Br. Zeisberger went with a number of Indian brethren to see the great bend, which is six or seven miles in extent, but at the start hardly a half-mile over. They came back at noon,...
